

5 myths

about voting BNP

The BNP like to portray themselves as the only party unafraid to break the politically correct consensus and stand up for ordinary working Britons.

They're relying on you not knowing the truth about their party.

Myth #1: The BNP stands up for ordinary Britons

The BNP puts its extremist ideology before the lives of voters. They've committed to near doubling taxes on food, electronics and clothes (costing £5000 a year) to pay for their economic isolationism and tax breaks for the rich. They want to abolish supermarkets, unleash assault onto our streets and bankrupt our public services.

Myth #2: The BNP is a patriotic party

The BNP is proud of its race, not its country. They have no affection for our history or institutions, and believe we can't cope with the challenges of the modern world. The BNP believes the country that defeated Hitler, ended the slave trade and birthed the industrial revolution should just hide away.

Myth #3: The BNP stand up for traditional values

The BNP doesn't understand that its your values, not your race, that defines being British. True British values are tolerance, fair play and decency, not the BNP's bigotry. As long as you play by the rules, you're welcome here. We don't scapegoat minorities when times get tough.

Myth #4: All politicians are just as bad

The BNP is hoping that you'll use them as a protest vote, allowing their vile views to slip into power. But no matter how much mainstream politicians disappoint us, patriotic Britons fight fascist, not vote for it.

Myth #5: The BNP aren't so extreme anymore

The BNP's leaders remain extremists. Many of their leaders have convictions for racial hatred, and past records of Nazi worshipping. You may be worried about immigration and crime, but you don't believe in terrorising black and asian families. The BNP want you to believe they've change - don't let their rebranding exercise fool you.

This man wants to raise your taxes, put guns on your streets and divide
your community.

British people believe in fair play, decency and giving everyone a chance.

Vote for Britain, not the BNP.
