

Thinking of voting BNP as a protest against the mainstream?

Times are difficult. It's hard to get a job. Violent crime is on the rise.

The BNP is relying on the fact that you'll use them as a protest, and let their bigotry and intolerance slip into power.

But you're British. And no matter how hard it is out there, or however much normal politicians aggravate you, British people don't vote for fascists. We fight them.

Being British means believing in our values

While the BNP believes in racial prejudice and division, British people believe you're defined by your values, not your race. We believe in fairness, decency and standing up for the little guy.

Being British means working together

Britain has always been a tolerant union of different peoples, and tolerates differences. We don't scapegoat minorities for our problems. The BNP believes that minorities should be second class citizens, and in turning the people of our country against each other.

Being British means believing in our country

Britain gave the world parliamentary democracy, the English language and football. We are proud of our history and institutions, while the BNP hates the Queen, thinks we were on the wrong side in World War II and believes Britain can only cope shut off from the world.

There's Nothing British About Voting BNP

“It was supposed to be a protest vote.”
