

POLICY FOCUS

How the BNP would bring back guns, censorship and the cane

KEY POINTS

Compulsory assault rifles
Bring back the death penalty
Bring back national service

Bring back corporate punishment in schools
Censor morality of popular tv shows
Introduce electronically tagged chain gangs

WHAT ARE BNP POLICIES?

The BNP wishes to portray itself as a party tough on crime, untainted by the political correctness of the other mainstream parties. They would bring back the death penalty, introduce automatic prison sentences for repeat offenders and electronically tagged chain gangs to provide labour. They wish to create a new culture of discipline by restoring corporate punishment in schools, bring back national service, and would cancel soaps such as Eastenders and Coronation Street to encourage a higher morality. Each adult would be required to own a standard issue military assault rifle.

How the BNP would create an Orwellian Britain

Guns on our streets. Britain doesn't have a gun culture. By handing out assault rifles the BNP would cause a massive increase in gun crime and risk escalating inter community violence.

Return to the 1950s. The BNP hates modern, liberal Britain. Instead they wish to return to a repressive 1950s society of the cane, national service and the death penalty.

Eastenders censored. British adults do not need Nick Griffin to tell them what they can and cannot watch.

The press bullied. On the event of their election the BNP chillingly proposed to "hold meetings with the proprietors" of all the meetings of the major newspapers in order to prevent them "printing lies." The Press Complaints Commission is to be abolished, and a new criminal offence for the "deliberate dissemination of falsehoods" created.

Big Brother Britain. No loose ends would be left as BNP authorities scoured the country, trying to root out every last illegal immigrant. Houses would be searched, warehouses ransacked.

Schools turned into incubators of hate. Schools would become a vehicle to spread the BNP's racial hate. Not only would it be an offence to teach racial harmony, but every trainee teacher would be retrained to make sure they were indoctrinating Griffin's values.

The BNP would make life for minorities a living hell. For those who remained in Britain, there'd be the constant uncertainty would be next to be kicked out. They'd be pushed to the back of queue for public services, and branded as second class citizens. And the bigots who used to throw bricks would now be armed with machine guns.
